In my work with my own and client animals over the past twenty years or so, I have found certain life challenges to be so common that I have developed recipes for custom blends of flower essences to help. In most cases, I recommend both the person and animal take the same remedy due to the close intertwining of human and animal spirit.

When assisting animals overcome life challenges, approaching them with compassion and respect is always appropriate. Allowing your animals to actively participate in their own healing process fosters a relationship based on trust and sets the stage for both of you to "see" with a new perspective.
